On Thursday, the MPAA released a statement arguing that the "horrifying flood of counterfeit product into the market", as well as the practice of ripping CD copy-protection, has greatly threatened the DVD and Blu-ray markets. "The millions of Americans who love movies will not stand for this stolen film merchandise flooding our market," said MPAA Chairman and CEO Chris Dodd in a statement. "These counterfeits are hampering a great industry, devaluing the movie business, and jeopardizing the livelihoods of American workers." According to the MPAA, counterfeiters make up to 10% of the overall market, and a recent report by The Information found that at least 4.5% of US retail copies of DVDs and Blu-ray discs were counterfeit. The campaign will target counterfeit DVD and Blu-ray disc retailers who sell thousands of copies of counterfeit DVDs and Blu-ray discs to Internet sites, the report said. The campaign will call upon the MPAA, its members, and its allies to "aggressively investigate and prosecute those who traffic in these products." This month, the MPAA said that it intends to use the 2010 holiday season to launch "Operation Summer Meltdown," which aims to stop movie pirates from "selling counterfeit DVDs, Blu-ray discs, and movies in brick-and-mortar retail stores." Last month, the MPAA said that it had sent cease-and-desist letters to two Internet sites which were selling bootlegged discs. The Internet sites will not be named due to a "false advertising lawsuit," according to Variety. Read moreQ: How to specify image width and height in square pixels?
